

MSW Transfer Station Operators Training Course Registration

This course is provided by the S.C. Department of Health and Environmental Control's (DHEC) Division of Mining and Solid Waste Management.

Training for Municipal Solid Waste (MSW) Transfer Station Operators will be held in Columbia. The primary goal of the training is to provide individuals who work as MSW transfer station operators a program designed to improve operational practices at their facilities. The training will increase awareness of the impact that the operational practices have on human health and the environment.

Participants will gain insight on:

- operating a facility that is safe for employees and customers;
- maintaining regulatory compliance and environmental integrity at the facility;
- operating profitably and/or cost effectively; and
- improving industry standards through better operation by well-trained solid waste management professionals.

DHEC is offering this training to operators in the public and private sector to improve the operation and overall management of MSW transfer stations. By taking this training, you will:

- gain a better understanding of DHEC regulations;
- learn methods of operation that achieve compliance, improve efficiency and possibly save money;
- learn ways materials can be reused and recycled; and
- have the opportunity to become a professionally trained MSW transfer station operator.

Come and listen to what other transfer station operators have accomplished. Share your ideas, problems and concerns. Leave with ideas for improving management, operations, and efficiency that save money and raise personal expectations.
